This includes information about how to run lessons using modelled writing, shared writing, guided writing, and independent writing. This resource also provides information about:

- Teaching writing to students who are at different developmental stages
- Basic writing skills
- The different purposes of writing
- The writing process
- Literacy centres that enforce writing skills and strategies
- Monitoring the development of students' writing skills
- Teaching reluctant writers

How can these resources be used in the classroom?

The balanced literacy approach is a proven method of teaching literacy skills and considers all aspects of literacy development. These resources provide teachers with key information about the instructional tools that can be used with the student and teacher resources created specifically for Inuktitut Titiqqiriniq.

Why use this resource?

For those teachers unfamiliar with the balanced literacy approach to instruction, these resources provide valuable information about different considerations for teaching students to read and write in Inuktitut. Both resources explain how to provide students with direct instruction in whole-group and small-group settings, and then provide opportunities for students to apply what they have learned by working independently and with other students.
